

New research reveals Australians care most about family

By Perpetual Private Insights

5 March 2020

In what's been an unsettling start to 2020 (coronavirus, Australian bushfires, tradewars and other geopolitical risks) we're seeing a growing number of enquiries from clients about how to protect what they care about most – including their family and home. In this article, we explore how the family and the family home act as key drivers for making financial decisions in times of uncertainty. We also provide some practical tips on how you can protect your loved ones and ensure you safeguard your assets and financial wellbeing.

What do Australians care about?

When we asked 3,000 Australians about their key priorities in life, family (88%) is the area that resonated most, followed by one's financial situation (69%) and physical health (69%). The differences between men and women are subtle, with women giving family a slighter higher weighting than men (91% vs 84%).*

Key findings from Perpetual 'what do people care about' study

There were some interesting findings for those Australians who care most (as opposed to those that care a little) about family. For example, Australians who care more than anything about family are more likely to:

Family

Want their children to:

Be comfortable talking with family

Help parents in a variety of circumstances:

Including looking after them if they become sick or incapacitated

Describe their relationship with family as:

Home and Environment

Value the importance of their home

Describe the family home as:

a "safe haven"
51%

memories"
33%

Financial Decisions

Help children financially with

OR

Saving for a home

Paying medical bills

Conscious of their spending

● Living within their means

● Never spending what they don't have 48%

Have a will

15%

Have an active relationship with their financial adviser

5%

Have little contact with their financial adviser

Ensure you protect what you care about

To protect your family and the wealth you've spent a lifetime building up, we suggest you:

Involve your adviser

Discuss and regularly review your priorities and goals with a financial adviser. A core element of a financial plan is to cover the costs of ageing by protecting your nest egg for the long term. Estate planning and the transfer of wealth are also carefully considered.

According to Lembit: "People with a financial adviser are planning for their future. They recognise the value of expertise and they're keen to be financially independent in retirement. They'd like to fulfil their personal goals while assuring the future for their family."

"Your financial plan should change as your life changes. This means regularly reviewing your plan to make sure it continues to be relevant to your needs."

Involve your family

Have a (sometimes difficult) conversation with your partner and/or children about your financial plan. Talk openly about your goals, the will and any intentions to leave a legacy.

“A time of crisis or uncertainty, like we’re experiencing now, may trigger these types of discussions. But we shouldn’t let circumstances force the conversation. It’s important your loved ones understand your intentions and you work together to agree on the role you would like them to play in safeguarding your legacy,” notes Lembit.

Lembit, G., (2019) ‘What do you care about’, Perpetual Client Insights and Analytics, released 26 September 2019

Perpetual Private advice and services are provided by Perpetual Trustee Company Limited (PTCo), ABN 42 000 001 007, AFSL 236643. This publication has been prepared by PTCo and contains information contributed by third parties. It contains general information only and is not intended to provide you with advice or take into account your objectives, financial situation or needs. You should consider with a financial adviser, whether the information is suitable for your circumstances. The information is believed to be accurate at the time of compilation and is provided by PTCo in good faith. To the extent permitted by law, no liability is accepted for any loss or damage as a result of any reliance on this information. PTCo does not guarantee the performance of any fund or the return of an investor’s capital. Past performance is not indicative of future performance. Published in August 2024.